I vividly remember as a young boy swimming on a coastal beach and being dumped in the surf. I was tossed around topsy turvy and was very aware of the power of the waves. I survived, but since then have always been afraid of turbulent water.

This Gospel resonates with that experience, and it resonates with lots of experiences in our lives.

Have you ever felt swamped by an event—a traumatic accident, the death of someone we love, betrayal by a friend, the loss of a job, failure in an exam—which seems to leave us floundering? A sudden tempest storms into our life and we can’t find our feet, can be quite literally gasping for air, we can feel we are drowning.

That is when we can cry out in our individual distress ‘Lord, save me’ and Our Lord will extend his hand, pull us from the turbulent water, get into the boat of life with us and calm the storm.

But, and this is very important, Our Lord will not take us back as if by magic to the previous situation. The storm might be behind us, but we have to press on.

The disciples had started off from the Jewish side of the Sea of Galilee, familiar territory. Jesus guided them through the stormy situation to “the other side”, the pagan side, unfamiliar territory where they would not have felt at home.

It takes courage for us to move to a new situation, but with Our Lord’s presence we need not be as afraid as we would otherwise be.

But this Gospel is not so much about individuals as it is about the Church. It is about the disciples of Jesus around the figure of Peter. We are the disciples of Jesus gathered in the boat with the successor of St Peter, Pope Francis.

When the Church is buffeted by storms, it is often because the Church is in the midst of a journey from familiar to unfamiliar territory. We can all list some of the storms of the past fifty years.

There is a new attitude to authority. Rule by dictate or decree with unreflecting obedience is not possible except in a few remaining authoritarian or totalitarian regimes. Rome-based clerics and bishops have to get used to this new situation, and Our Lord says to them ‘keep rowing’ to the unfamiliar shore.

There is a new attitude to gender roles. The feminist movement has challenged many of the stereotypes by which women had been subjugated over the centuries. Males have got to get used to this new situation and Our Lord says to us ‘keep rowing’ to the unfamiliar shore.

Pope Francis is rowing in the right direction on that score. As he has said: ‘The challenge today is this, to think about the specific place of women also in those places where the authority of the Church is exercised for various areas of the Church.’ [A Big Heart Open to God, America: National Catholic Review 30/9/13]

There is a new attitude to priests and bishops. There is anger and suspicion at sexual abuse and its cover up. Transparency and responsibility are demanded. Clergy have got to get used to this new situation. Our Lord says ‘keep rowing’ to an unfamiliar shore.

Youth Off The Streets with Fr. Chris Riley: Often we forget that there are young people who find it difficult to access the education that is so important to the development of a child. Yet every year in Australia around 50,000 young people aged 15 to 19 drop out of education and are unemployed. (NSW Department of Education, 2010.) Many of these young people have suffered disadvantage due to family breakdowns, mental illness, substance abuse, poverty and are at risk from positive community interaction such as unemployment and training. Our role as adults is to make sure that these young people are supported and to recognise their needs. It is a fact that not all people can thrive in mainstream education, and, as a result, there need to be alternatives available to ensure that we can still equip our youth with skills and opportunities that will lead them to become happy and contributing community members. I founded the organisation Youth Off The Streets in 1991 and over 20 years of services as well as my own experience prior has taught me that education is the key to preventing our youth from becoming reliant on welfare and suffering the effects of prolonged social isolation. As a result, Youth Off The Streets has set up four accredited high schools that provide young people with the opportunity to achieve an education in an alternative setting to mainstream education. Our schools are designed to re-engage students with education by focusing on individual interests and skills and linking learning with those strengths. If students struggle to engage in note-taking in a class we will take an alternative approach to learning, such as through a hands on project. We work to re-ignite a passion for learning by structuring the curriculum so that students may best progress on their path to their own end goal. Our schools include Key College located in Redfern, Chapel School Campus—Key College located at Merrylands, Matthew Hogan School located in the Southern Highlands and Eden College Campus—Key College and which has recently relocated to our new Koch Centre for Youth in Macquarie Fields. Our school intake has grown greatly over the years and we have seen a 31 per cent increase in students counted in our census from August 2011 until February 2012. These schools are all designed to give young people experiencing disadvantage a last chance to achieve either the NSW School Certificate, Higher School Certificate or the skills they require to go on to further vocational education apprenticeships and/or employment. These young people need to know that they can reach their full potential and that there are services that are available that support them in their needs and goals. I will continue to work to offer those services.

Homily

A conservative Protestant Church in a sleepy fishing village had to find a new minister. Over the protests of Jimmy, the senior Elder, a woman was hired as the new Pastor.

After the Reverend Gayle had been there a few weeks, Tom, a member of the congregation, offered to take her out fishing. Jimmy reluctantly agreed to allow them to use his boat for the day's outing, but insisted that he lead the expedition.

The trio got into the boat and motored out on the lake. When they got ready to fish, they realised that all their tackle had been left on the dock. Tom concluded that they would just have to go back and get it. Reverend Gayle said that wouldn't be necessary, and she got out of the boat and started walking across the water toward the dock.

Jimmy, who refused to be impressed by Gayle’s miraculous abilities observed, ‘See I told you we never should have hired that woman. She can’t even swim.’

The hit animation film Shrek was praised by critics for many things but most especially for the clever way it quoted from several other much-loved animation films. When writers do this it’s called ‘intertextuality’, where one text uses another text to tell the story. Some of the references in Shrek were obvious; others took a little longer to reveal themselves. Some were used in a new way that turned the original story upside down. Whether any of us got all or none of the references didn’t affect the enjoyment we derived from the film, it only added to what was already a great tale.

The story of Jesus walking on the water is in a similar vein to Shrek. In eleven verses Matthew quotes several other stories in the Old Testament, uses them in his own way and re-interprets all of them in reference to Jesus. It might be lost on some of us who just enjoy the power of the story, but none of this intertextuality would have been lost on Matthew’s first hearers.

Poor old Job found God in the midst of a storm, and winds and waves are a usual Old Testament shorthand for the perils of life. The image of the boat was an early symbol for the Church and Matthew has all Jesus’ disciples in it. Jesus hovering over the waters has echoes of the action of the Spirit in the first account of creation in Genesis. Even Jesus restoring calm to the sea follows on from what the Prophet Jonah had done before. For the keen student there is much more besides.

Matthew’s account is magnificent on its own terms, but with these details we can see he is also interested in a theological message. Jesus, the Son of God and Lord of creation, remains faithful to the disciples, no matter how treacherous the seas or how great their fear. He has come to them so that they may be saved and recreated as the Church who recognises that he is the fulfilment of creation, the one whom Israel has been longing to see and embrace.

And what does all this mean for us?

We are inheritors of Matthew’s faith. We’re here because we believe that Jesus is the Son of God who has saved us from ourselves and from destruction. But it also means that in every storm that threatens our lifeboat Jesus comes to call us to faith, to catch us when we think we’re drowning, to accompany us back to safety and to bring calm to the troubled seas of our life.

Aren’t we lucky Jesus never learnt to swim?

Gospel Reflection

By Greg Sunter

I don’t know that we’ve ever properly understood the significance of the disciples in the gospels; our attention is always focused on Jesus. The disciples certainly got the inside running on all of Jesus’ teachings; they witnessed the miracles; and were themselves empowered to carry on the work of Jesus. They can be seen as the prototypes for all the followers of Jesus that have come since. When we read the gospel stories we can perhaps place ourselves in the position of James or John or Peter or Andrew.

To be a disciple to a rabbi was not just to be a supporter or an interested bystander. To be a disciple was to hungrily learn from your rabbi. The fact that all of Jesus’ disciples were called from other walks of life means that no other rabbi had already chosen them. They had been passed over as not good enough to study with a rabbi. When they were called by Jesus it was an opportunity they would never have dreamed possible; of course they left everything and followed him.

To be a disciple was effectively an apprenticeship to becoming a rabbi. To be discipled to a rabbi was to believe that you could do what your rabbi did. It is this belief that makes Peter get out of the boat. His rabbi is walking on the water and Peter believes that he can do what his rabbi does. And extraordinarily, Peter begins to walk on the water just like Jesus. It is only when he starts to think about what he’s doing that he sinks.

When Jesus asks Peter, ‘Why did you doubt?’ he is asking Peter why he doubted himself. It wasn’t that Peter doubted Jesus; he doubted his own ability to be the equal of his rabbi!
Of course, throwing tradition overboard willy-nilly is not a solution either. There is Tradition with a capital ‘T’ which is the Spirit-led experience of Catholic Christianity over two millennia. That is not to be jettisoned. But the grace of discernment is needed. In particular, Our Lord will not allow us the indulgence of nostalgic yearning for the safety of the past country inhabited by the Church. We must make our way to the other shore. Perhaps we are called to help build a new structure of the Church on that other shore. We know the preferred model put forward by the current successor of St Peter: ‘I see the Church as a field hospital after battle. ... Heal the wounds, heal the wounds. ... And you have to start from the ground up.’

We can row with courage because we know we are in the same boat as Peter to whom our Risen Lord constantly extends a saving hand. ‘Do not be afraid.’
